THE BHP

The Broken Hill Pub

The hotel was established on 13th April 1886 and was originally called The Broken Hill Hotel. Constructed of weatherboard timber and corrugated iron, it was a reasonably well-appointed hotel – although stifling hot in summer!

In 1889 the hotel was bought by the Freemasons. They removed the hotel to the Tarrowingee township and built the current building you see today for their members at a cost of 14,000 pounds (around $2 million dollars in today's money).

The Freemasons renamed The Broken Hill Hotel to Broken Hill Freemasons Hotel in 1891, otherwise known as the Freemasons Hotel. This is where it began its illustrious history as the principal hotel and accommodation venue in Broken Hill. With the furnishing of the new hotel complete, it included a ladies' drawing room, coffee rooms, a smoke room, 19 guest rooms, several new bathrooms, and leather back chairs. The luncheon was held at 1pm for a fee of 2 shillings and sixpence. It is also noted that the Freemasons Hotel had a telephone connection in 1892!

In December 1911, a very important addition was placed outside of the hotel on a pole. It was a Horse Cab Phone under the verandah, for use by the Freemasons Hotel clients. Later there was some controversy as cab men would fight over the use of the phone.

Another massive rebuild of the hotel took place in 1940. The hotel gets a new roof, verandah, island bar, hot and cold water connected, refurbished staff quarters, new kitchen, and upstairs bar and lounge area. The cost of this was estimated to be around 20,000 pounds.

A question remains at this time whether this was the actual beginning of the now famous "Blonde Room" for superior entertaining and dinners for special guests. Many wedding dinners occurred here during the next few decades in this room. The colour of the timber "Blonde" is the origin of the name. It was the original old "Freemasons Hall" within the two-storey building.

A major name change occurred in June 1969. The Freemasons Hotel changed its name to The West Darling Motor Inn and began a new chapter in its long history.

It remained as the West Darling Hotel until 2014 when it was sold to Steve Radford and Margaret McBride.

They closed the pub and started extensive renovations throughout the whole pub. This included a huge outdoor beer garden at the rear of the pub, a fresh-looking restaurant with an open loft area, knocking down walls and opening up the street front access to a stylish bar, putting in an elevator for easy access upstairs, new balcony and the list goes on and on.

The pub re-opened in January 2020 as The Broken Hill Pub (The BHP) and survived its challenges with "Covid" lockdowns like many other businesses in town.

In more recent times, The Broken Hill Pub was sold in October 2023 to the Baillie Family. The Baillie's have an extensive history with Broken Hill – dating back as far as 4 generations (their grandfather was a miner at the Zinc Mine). Don't be surprised to see them here enjoying a cold beer or dinner with the family and friends.
